

Gifted/ADHD Issues

I am particularly interested in working with gifted and talented adolescents and young adults who find they are struggling in specific areas or during certain major life transitions such as going from high school to college or from college to graduate studies or professional training.

Often, individuals who have excelled throughout their childhood are reluctant to come in for an evaluation. They often assume that they could not have an attention or learning problem, but even extremely bright, talented, and intelligent individuals struggle with these disorders and seeking treatment early can make a world of difference in their continuing success.
